What a brand portal offers

Every brand runs its own portal, with its own name on it: for example "MAISON NOOR · Brand portal".

Request access

Request access on the brand's portal. Once the brand approves, you receive an invitation by email.

Search and filter

By brand, season, collection, product type or colour. Every article with all its images and data.

Paste your EAN list

Paste the EANs from your POS to see which articles are available and which are missing.

Download options

One photo, one article, your selection or everything in a filter as a zip. Original (if the brand allows it), web or square.

Article data as a spreadsheet

EAN per size, colour, material, care and description, ready for your own system.

Usage rights

Every image shows its usage rights, the embargo date and whether it was made with AI.

An API key for your software

Your webshop, PIM or POS software can fetch everything automatically, matched to your articles by EAN. Request an API key for it in the brand's portal: a personal password for your software.

Finding a brand

Brands that choose to be listed appear in the directory. A brand can also give you the address of its portal directly. openbrandexchange.com/en/directory/

Which software works with it

Any software can support the open standard; Photopilot is building it into its software for retailers. No specific software is required: a browser is enough.

Your product images and article data through Open Brand Exchange?

Dear [name],

We sell [brand] in our store and online shop. To present your articles well, we need your final product photos and article data: the EAN per size, material, care instructions and the images in the right order.

Today this often reaches us as loose files and emails. Would you consider Open Brand Exchange? It is a free, open standard that lets a brand publish its content once for all of its retailers:

- your own portal where we log in, search by our EANs and download;
- a standard API, so our software fetches images and data by itself;
- automatic publishing from your PIM, ERP or a folder of exports.

The software is open source: you can host it yourself for free or choose a provider. You decide who gets access and you see who downloads what.

The quickest way to get a brand on board is for stores to ask for it. A ready-made email to send your contact at the brand is on openbrandexchange.com/en/for-retailers/#switch-kit.

Frequently asked questions

What do retailers need?

A browser. Retailers with software that fetches images by itself can request an API key for that software.

Which image formats are there?

The original, exactly as you uploaded it, plus a web version (at most 2000 px), a square version and a small preview. Retailers choose what they need.

Does it keep information about AI and rights in the images?

Yes. Usage rights, the embargo date and whether AI was involved are part of every image. Originals are stored and delivered unchanged, including any embedded content credentials.

What does it cost?

The standard and the software are free. If you host it yourself you pay only for your hosting. A provider charges its own prices, which you find on its own website.

Is it ready?

Yes, version 0.3: the specification, the three portal editions and the tools are released and free to use. It is early days: the first brands are joining now.

Questions, or want to take part from the start?

We are looking for retailers who want to help shape the first version: which brands would you like to connect, and which software do you use? Email us.
